Theseems to be pretty well understood that anti-foreign Councils are the order of the day at Peking.

There is no doubt, either that Prince Kung was dograded because of his supposed pro-foreign aspiraflore, or that his re-clevation to power is to be ascribed to the discovery that this supposition was a grave error. Since the late evacuation of the Taku forts, much labor and outlay have been expended strongthening the fortifications, -infact, it is said, that when the plan adopted shall be carried out these forts will be impregnable except to iron-clads. The proceeding is significant when taken in connexion with the anti-foreign policy known to be cherished, but at the same time there can be no reasonable objection arged against the Chinese government fortifying their Capital. On the contary, the Mandarins will surely find that whilst they will be required to fulfill their proper duties and to perform their responsibilities, every measure adopted to strongthen their hands and elsewte their prestige, will be heartily supported.
